Knowles, David Anderson and Aubrey Knowles, having caught black bass and frogs until they had become tired of fish diet, concluded three days ago to wind up their vacation and return to their business, and the fish and frogs are breathing easier. Three weeks ago the quartet drave stakes and spread canvas on the big island opposite Pennifield's lock, and proceeded to have an enjoyable time. The first morning's outing netted more than enough bass for breakfast, and it was found convenient to arrange a live box to keep fish for future use. Aubrey Knowles drew the lot of commissary, not fully realizing what duties he had to perform, but when the campers

he said, when he returned from a farmer's house on the mainland with eggs that had been laid only an hour or two and chickens that were the fattest the campers had ever seen.

Next month the quar et will camp above Harpers Ferry. William F. Knowles has the pleasure of knowing he landed about the largest small-mouth bass caught in this section, the fish having weighed about five and a half pounds.

Good fishing is attracting hundreds of anglers to Chesapeake Beach this season, and the sight of so many of them lined along the pier is an attractive one to those who enjoy the sport. Southern's Tunnel Still a Menace. LYNCHBURG, Va., August 21.-Five workmen nearly lost their lives yesterday afternoon in an effort to open the Southern tunnel, all of them being overcome by carbonic acid gas, with which the excavation became filled when the steam went into it last week to extinguish the blaze. At midnight Thursday night the sion the evening of September 10, when gas was so dense that a lantern placed within fifty feet of the small aperture through which the gas was escaping, was session before the great ceremonial ses- extinguished. Last night the volume of sion in October, which is to be held in gas had diminished slightly and hopes taken down tomorrow. It was estimated the purchase of the ceremonial robes and yesterday that the 900 feet of the tunnel with gas.
